Bio Data

Hugo Cardoso is a linguistics professor at the University of Lisbon, specifically at the Center of Linguistics (CLUL). His research primarily focuses on the Portuguese-lexified creole languages of Asia. Cardoso has conducted extensive fieldwork in various locations in India and has worked on documenting Sri Lanka Portuguese, an endangered language of the Portuguese Burgher community, spoken mainly in Sri Lanka's Eastern Province.

In addition to his fieldwork, Cardoso has published numerous articles in various academic journals. His works include studies on the postnatal maturation of the sternum, the growth indicators in children during historical transitions in Portugal, and the impact of social violence on the growth of African enslaved children in Lagos, Portugal. He has also explored the development of deciduous tooth length as an estimate of age in human immature skeletal remains and the effects of stunting on obesity in adulthood.

Abstract: In 2018, a long-lost manuscript suddenly resurfaced in the archives of a Lisbon museum. The short booklet, probably produced in Indonesia in the late 17th or early 18th century, contains various poems in a variety of Malay and in a Portuguese-based creole, and constitutes a unique record of two of the most important languages of early colonial Batavia (Jakarta). This talk introduces the history of the manuscript, its contents, and its contributions to linguistic and historical research.
